Astrology is a metaphysics science that studies planets in motion. The patterns of these motions give meaning to how people relate to others and their personalities. Astrologers believe that the alignment of the stars when someone is born can tell many things about personality and its effect on relationships. This also includes dating behavior and attraction. A couple's birth chart will show the areas of a couple's compatibility. When there is conflict or incompatibility, it indicates that the couple has to either work on those areas or end the relationship because of them. If you receive your report and it's not as favorable as you would have liked, don't let it break your heart. While many believe in the meaning behind astrology and relationships, others do not. You will need to determine how much you will let the report affect your relationship. If you are looking for a compatibility report just for fun, then you will probably take the results lightly. However, if you are already having doubts about the future of your relationship, the results of the report may confirm your feelings and put your mind to ease about whether you are making the right decision in ending the relationship. While looking at astrology may help you determine relationship compatibility, you might consider looking at similarities in other areas of your relationship such as: Interests Communication Finances Sex Religion Values and morals These are some of the most important qualities in healthy and successful relationships, so it's wise to consider how compatible you are in these areas to determine if you are with the right person. By putting your astrological compatibility report together with these core areas of your relationship, you'll have a good indication if you've found your soulmate. Most of the free reports available above give advice regarding how the couple can best relate to one another based on each person's sign. When trying to predict romantic compatibility, the houses you should focus on are the 1st, 5th, 7th, and 8th houses.You are looking to see which of your planets fall into which houses of your partner and vice versa. Using the significance of the planets as described above combined with the meanings of the houses below will give you a more personalized and detailed idea of what you and your partner mean to each other.Ideally, you and your partner will have many planets in each other's 1st, 5th, 7th, and 8th houses.Here is what these houses tell you about your compatibility:1st HouseThe first house represents the self, identity, attitude, and approach to life.When you and your partner have planets in each other's first houses, it means the general attraction between you is strong and you approve of each other's outlooks on life and attitudes.5th HouseThe fifth house represents romance and love affairs.It's important to have planets in your partner's fifth house because it indicates strong romantic compatibility, deep familiarity, and shared likes and dislikes.7th HouseThe seventh house represents relationships, marriage, sharing, contracts, and interpersonal style. This house is extremely important for long-term relationships and marriages.If you and your partner have planets in each other's seventh houses, it means your relationship could stand the test of time.8th HouseThe eighth house represents sex, intimacy, and shared finances.Planets in each other's eighth houses signify strong sexual attraction and compatibility, but it may also signify a need to control one another.If you want, you can simply look for whether or not you have any planets in these houses on your partner's chart or vice versa.But to take the compatibility report a step further, you need to also consider what the specific planets mean and combine it with the significance of the houses to get a more accurate reading.The AspectsIn Astrology, aspects are the angles that planets make with each other on the zodiac wheel. The angles have specific meanings that are important when reading your birth chart.You can look at the aspects on just your chart, or you can compare the angles made when your planets overlay your partner's chart on yours.The five major aspects are conjunction, trine, sextile, opposition, and square. Here is what the five major aspects mean:ConjunctionA conjunction means your planets are in the same sign. This is the most powerful aspect in synastry and intensifies the energy of these planets.Some conjunctions are great because it shows similarities between you and your partner, but too many conjunctions can create discord.The astrological meaning of the planets in conjunction with each other is important to consider.TrineA trine is when two planets form a 150° angle and it's the most positive aspect in synastry. It represents harmony and compatibility.Trines are mostly positive in synastry readings, but too many trines can represent stagnancy and boredom in the relationship if the two people get too comfortable with one another.SextileA sextile is when two planets form a 60° angle and, like a trine, is a very positive aspect in synastry. It represents harmonious energy and a long-term bond in some ways, a sextile is even more positive than a trine in synastry because the two signs are always going to be in different elements, which alleviates the risk of boredom or stagnancy.SquareA square is when two planets create a 90° angle. When looking at squares in synastry, think of the expression "to square off," or to challenge each other.Although this aspect represents excitement and possible growth, it can also indicate a desire to control and dominate each other.If there are too many squares, it means you and your partner bring out the worst in each other.OppositionAn opposition is when two planets create a 180° angle. This aspect is quite powerful and is like when opposites attract.It represents strong magnetism, but also holding up a mirror to each other. An opposition reveals intense attraction but also challenges.As with the houses, you can simply look to see which of these aspects are present in your charts and what they mean, or you can dig deeper by analyzing the specific planets and their significance combined with the aspect meanings.SummaryWhen using astrology to determine romantic compatibility, there is much more to synastry than just you and your partner's sun signs.By using a birth chart generator and looking at the relationships between the planets, houses, and aspects on your charts, you can get a strong and accurate prediction of your compatibility.Related ArticlesShop For My Favorite Items on Amazon...
